Subject: Consumer Protection "Subscription Potential Lock in"

Message Body:

1. The consumer protection rules are a good start on the details of consumer interactions with Developers.
2. However, the consumer protections fail to address the foundational issue of whether Developers are offering subscriptions to projects that may not be built with-in allowable period of time for Developers to deliver their projects, and that the IPA process relies on Developer assurances concerning financing and permitting.
3. Based on this, you recommend that Developers be required to provide the following before a subscription is enforceable:

- A. An affidavit from Developers that all local permits have been granted

- B. An affidavit from Developers that full project financing for the project has been secured.

I feel that once a subscription is signed this would lock in a consumer who might be stuck for 18 months before he/she can change to a developer who is actually demonstrating clearly a date when power can be delivered.

- C. This caution or right should be stated in the brochure.

Chet,

Thank you so much for your comments on the community solar consumer protection documents. The IPA and the Program Administrator will review and consider your comments as we finalize the documents.

Regards,
